Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

Throughout the years, history has improved about including all people. Now, compared to a long time ago, workplaces, schools, and various environments have become more diverse. But what does it all mean?

Think about it this way. Imagine yourself at a table, you invite everybody to be seated with you at the table. That is inclusion. No matter who they are, you invited them. Diversity is that you invite people from various places and cultures. Equity is that those who cannot reach the table, you will give them a taller chair. At school I see tons of glorious examples of diversity, equity, and inclusion; but we can always improve this.

Sometimes, everyday conversations can help make our school more diverse and equal. We need to work and share our ideas with people regardless of their religion, race, or gender. We should not exclude people because of that. No matter what, we should keep improving our ways to make them more diverse, inclusive, and equitable.

There are still challenges that people face at school, work, and really anywhere! An example is that lots of disabled children cannot access things that other kids can such as playground equipment and certain physical activities. Finding a curriculum that all kids can do is difficult but if we can keep innovating and pushing for changes to be made so that all people; no matter their gender, religion, abilities, disabilities, or race, can be included and have the same opportunities as everybody else.
